

This Year's South by South West (SXSW) conference - very 'wet' Indeed

by styx Monday, Mar 10 2014, 12:56am

international / prose / post

This year Assange spoke from his self-imposed prison at the Ecuadorian Embassy in London -- Assange has now painfully learnt the COST of breaking the cardinal rule of uber hackers, ANONYMITY! However, Assange's discourse at the SXSW was interrupted by numerous technical breaks -- which is ironic if you consider the gathering is organised and run by digital 'geeks' -- try learning how to maintain communications by using multiple synchronised lines of various media interchanging between them if bogeys attempt to disrupt events -- the modern audience, God help the useless lamers, has no staying power whatsoever, which again verifies that social change is ALWAYS the RESULT of actions and strategies of a very few highly motivated and skilled individuals; in that context Assange's address simply became another exercise in narcissism. No sympathy or apologies, mate, as you set an appalling example for younger, emerging digital warriors!

Assange, the worse for 'indoor' wear

So what is the gist of Assange's address, I sincerely hope it's not more 'revelations' of what is already known -- Snowden specialises in revealing the known and duped journo Greenwald, now conveniently removed from a viable platform in the mass media, assists in superficial reporting without contextualising or relating the current reality to the KNOWN REALITY of the ruling PLUTOCRACY. Do a little research on the CFR, Bilderberg, Trilaterals etc., avoiding the distracting conspiracy shit it attracts.

Surely, "gifted" Assange, who has cleverly managed to incarcerate himself for two years in a very confined indoor space, is aware of the (criminal) power elites for whom the NSA, CIA, GCHQ and a host of other agencies work; if not try 'youtubing or googling' Rothchilds, Rockefellers, Global Federal Reserve System and the Banker/Mercantile history of the Western world.

But somehow ('gifted') alternative commentators forever skirt the issue and dwell on the periphery -- for fuck's sake the entire world is NOW aware that ALL western governments, without exception, are owned by PRIVATE, mega-wealthy elites; it is not news nor does it constitute a revelation that western governments are totally corrupt and serve the same interests for whom so-called 'intelligence' agencies endlessly toil -- I would add that recent claims by Assange are vastly exaggerated, as the "total surveillance" to which he refers cannot find what it cannot see, though it stares it in the 'face;' what I mean of course is that 'faces' (IDs) should never connect to 'certain events'-- in fact some of our elite warriors actually work for the 'man' in highly sensitive areas; the REALITY is that 'security' agencies no matter how tight their security protocols, are easily COMPROMISED from the inside, in fact, they have more security holes than Swiss cheese -- where and how do you imagine we (SUCCESSFULLY) wage our campaigns and are able to evade the 'man' while doing so; obtaining valuable and compromising inside information is child's play simply because of the flawed and fallible nature of human beings and the incredibly flawed systems they create -- remember the old hacker adage, Julian, 'whatever one man makes another can break?'

So enough with these EXAGGERATED Orwellian Big brother claims that ONLY serve to weaken and terrorise the moronic masses -- as you are aware we were able to contact one of your intimate associates and deliver a message to you, 'nothing personal' mate! But that was done in a selected and familiar setting where we were able to operationally maintain the greater proportion of social/environmental control.

Now as Thoreau (or was it Rumpelstiltskin?) said, strike at the root if you would fell the tree, branch and leaf bashing is futile, but it does get you press; you just can't help yourself, can you, mate -- LOL.

Though, it is true that whenever high profile personalities expose the criminal core elite of ruling plutocrats, somehow they die suddenly or in mysterious circumstances -- so if it's fear Julian, we understand but then it's your credibility and reputation at stake!

Our advice is to religiously adhere to the K-I-S-S principle (tiresome monologues are definitely out); target those responsible and strike at the root not the bloody leaves.

Have a nice indoor day, dear boy, and regards to j, if you are still on intimate speaking terms!

Glenn Greenwald, useful idiot

<http://rt.com/news/assange-surveillance-nsa-total-698/>

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-1044.html>