All America's wars waged over the past fifteen years are Corporate wars, that is, wars fought for profit. There is no honour fighting these wars as they are not fought in the national or public interest but are fought in the interests of the private sector for the benefit of the few. So it should come as no surprise that Americans are tiring of these dishonourable wars, which corporate-serving neocons wish to sell to the public/world as perpetual wars against 'terrorism.'

Recent polls suggest that over 60% of Americans disapprove of America's interventions around the globe, but most especially the prospect of supporting unpopular Western Ukrainian fascists in a likely civil war scenario -- the majority of Ukrainians vehemently oppose and despise these former Nazi collaborators and would rather defect to Russia than tolerate rule by this extremist minority which Washington unwisely supports.

In order to boost support for the corporate perpetual war machine that thrives on the blood of millions of innocent men, women and children, the U.S. mass media has resorted to the most absurd extremist views in U.S. history. The Washington Post is promoting 'war as peace' and devastation and destruction as good for business/profit, never mind the screaming psychopathology of these articles.

Today, Orwellian fiction has become American reality.
