Buckingham Palace is outraged over the publication of images of scrawny Kate Middleton's tits -- I mean there's nothing special about Kate's tits. Anachronistic monarchies around the world take note, though most are wise enough to stay out of the sensationalist media.

William and Kate

It's about time the British Royal family realised they are living in the 21 century and no longer have born to rule privileges, so if you don't like it, lump it!

Face reality for Christ's sake, and realise that Kate's husband, William, is son to a slut who fucked her riding instructor and gave birth to Harry, the deeply 'troubled' bastard Prince -- a DNA test would confirm what the entire world already knows. So what's in a picture or video of scrawny Kate knowingly removing her bikini top in full view (hmmm) of the paparazzi, not a great deal, be assured?

British Royals should learn fast that they are only tolerable when they behave themselves; they should limit their media exposure to the usual nostalgic fanfare and other Royal duties as the impotent figureheads they are.

Report from the Calgary Herald follows:

Royal couple angry over topless photos of Kate

PARIS - French magazine Closer published a series of photos of Britain's Duchess of Cambridge, Kate Middleton, sunbathing topless on Friday, dealing a fresh blow to the royal family as it tries to move on from a scandal over naked shots of Prince Harry.

Closer, a weekly round-up of celebrity gossip, ran a five-page spread of photos of Middleton relaxing topless with Prince William on a balcony at a 19th-century hunting lodge in southern France it said is owned by a son of the late Princess Margaret.

The photos - under the headline "Oh my God!" - show the Duchess removing her bikini top then relaxing on a sun lounger, apparently oblivious to paparazzi lurking nearby as the pair vacationed at the property in early September.

The publication reopens a debate over the privacy of Britain's royal family and the freedom of the press just weeks after a U.S. website published grainy photos of William's younger brother Harry cavorting naked in a Las Vegas hotel room.

"Harry started the fashion: these days the Windsors take their clothes off," the French magazine quipped in the photo spread, which it claimed as a world exclusive.

The royal couple, who are on a tour of southeast Asia, learned of the magazine spread while in Malaysia and were angry and sad their privacy had been breached, a royal source said, adding the pictures were believed to be genuine.

A second source said Buckingham Palace planned to contact French lawyers to see what options were available.

"There is a feeling of anger and disbelief about these photographs," the source said. "We feel there has been a red line crossed with regard to publishing these images."

There was no immediate comment from Closer magazine.

The photos of Harry stained a positive image the Royal family has carefully crafted as it worked to turn the page on Princess Diana's death in 1997 and a raft of scandals at the time including Prince Andrew's ex-wife Sarah Ferguson photographed having her toes sucked by a U.S. businessman as she sunbathed topless.

The first royal source said Friday's photos in Closer, taken at a private location and in breach of French privacy laws, had "turned the clock back 15 years."

William and Kate were on a short vacation at the Château d'Autet near Aix-en-Provence in the Luberon region, whose picture-postcard villages, rolling lavender fields and vineyards have made it a favourite getaway spot for wealthy foreigners.

At one point the Duchess, clearly recognizable in the slightly fuzzy images, stands up and partly peels down her bikini bottoms as William rubs sun lotion on her back.

"The last time we saw Kate and William on a balcony it was for their wedding. But they had more clothes on," reads one photo caption. Another says: "People always say she doesn't need to dress up to look good. Well ... Kate is proving this."

Closer also said Kate was spotted smoking a cigarette as the couple walked out of nearby Marseille airport where they arrived on a commercial flight.
