

Only in America do morons elect morons

by stacy - Daily Kos via Opednews Sunday, Nov 23 2014, 3:29am

international / prose / post

Michele Bachmann along with Sarah Palin are most noted for their constant gaffes and idiotic logic, the fact that these two imbeciles have been elected as government officials is an extremely poor reflection on the entire nation, needless to say! Bachmann's most recent contribution to the infamous hall of political fails is her recent statement in response to Obama's new immigration policy. Bachmann warns that America should be wary of "illiterate foreign nationals," which most moron Americans would view as sound advice but for the illiteracy of Bachmann's statement.

Bachmann, infamous American moron

Indeed, America should be very aware of foreign and domestic morons lowering the already bottomed national Intelligence Quotient.

Story from Opednews follows:

Michele Bachmann warns of "illiterate foreign nationals" voting in 2016

by staff report from Daily Kos

Rep. Michele Bachmann is going a little off the Republican Party's desired message on President Obama's planned action on immigration. The official Republican message is that their anger is about executive overreach, not about scary brown people. Bachmann, though, is definitely focused on the scary brown people:

"The social cost will be profound on the U.S. taxpayer -- millions of unskilled, illiterate, foreign nationals coming into the United States who can't speak the English language," Bachmann told reporters at the Capitol. "Even though the president says they won't be able to vote, we all know that many, in all likelihood, will vote."

Bachmann added: "The president has a very single-minded vision. He's looking at new voters for 2016.... People do vote without being a citizen. It's a wink and a nod, we all know it's going to happen." This is so wrong on so many levels. Set aside the overt racism, it's completely wrong about what Obama is doing. The plan is to allow people who have already been in the United States for years to avoid deportation, not about new arrivals in the country, and as Bachmann admits she knows, non-citizens are not allowed to vote.

But we really shouldn't set aside the overt racism. After all, the entire point here is to scare voters into being afraid of illiterate brown people dragging down the economy and taking over the government. That's pretty damn racist! However, Bachmann was prepared to explain that she had excellent sources for her claims:

"... I spent four days at the border and spoke to American Hispanics on the border. That's what they told me. Those are not Michele Bachmann's words, those words came from Hispanics who live on the border". I'm not using a pejorative term against people who are non-American citizens. I'm only repeating what I heard from Hispanic Americans down at the border. That's what they told me."

Right. I wonder if while she was there at the border, she ran into any mothers who told her that HPV vaccine causes "mental retardation" or any seven-foot doctor who told her Obamacare requires the IRS to pre-approve medical care.

Copyright applies

Perhaps this situation explains why America is actually run by what is referred to as the 'shadow government' or 'deep state' -- the cure to a multitude of social ills is AWARENESS!

Bachmann needn't be concerned as there is obviously a plentiful supply of domestic white morons that continue to vote for one or the other 'owned' major party, isn't that right, Rupert?

<http://tinyurl.com/o988pm6>

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-1352.html>