

Sea

by stacy Friday, Nov 28 2014, 11:28am international / poetry / post the sea is unfettered, land does not interrupt it it merely protrudes from it there is a great lesson to be learned from the sea, rather than directly battle with obstructions in its homogeneous expanse it surrounds, embraces and relentlessly erodes until the sea's homogeneous integrity once again conquers all and land that once was becomes the bottom of the depths as new land rises from the ocean floor when no immediate resistance is detected the obstruction foolishly believes it has prevailed and is lulled into a false sense of security, before it realises it is under threat it is overcome and replaced with fresh new land from the depths many continents have come and gone as a result of this relentless process, the only consistency throughout the process is that the sea never loses its character and integrity it remains the sea