

Contemplation

by jude Tuesday, Apr 14 2015, 1:05pm international / poetry / post during times of quiet introspection i sometimes ponder the gross injustices that beset the world today, they are enormous and many enough to overwhelm an individual however, quiet reflection always provides solutions – trust it implicitly out of the quiet reverie issues numerous answers, solutions and actions available to me, a single individual with limited ability so after reviving my spirit i simply get to work and oppose those that have transformed paradise into hell; they are only a few, and i realise how easily they are defeated by unwavering adherence to the moral values and laws of civilised society, criminals are terrified of the law as laws have been developed by righteous men over centuries

the failure today is not the system that has been hijacked by a few criminals, it simply is the failure to utilise what our forefathers have developed to ensure our welfare it is a simple matter to prosecute known criminals for their crimes and realise that laws were made for preventing evil from overtaking good enforcing the law is not a matter for police when police are controlled by criminal elites, it is a matter for an active, conscientious citizenry that refuse to be intimidated or terrorised by a few criminals and the political cowards that support them need i inform or remind people of their inalienable rights and prerogatives?

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-1557.html>