

'i'

by rae Friday, May 1 2015, 1:26am

international / poetry / post

if i ask the answer is never adequate,
if i seek
i do not find,
if i reach out
no hand is forthcoming
i am it seems alone
in my pursuit

if i look into a mirror
i see the reflection
of my body,
a transient form that disappears
during sleep -
in dreams i have various bodies free of the corporeal but yet 'i' remain the same
i know i am me
that something,
consistent

faced with the failures of seeking outside
i turn inward
to that consistency
as it has proven itself impervious to outside perturbations, it remains immutable
and inviolable

as i begin to see i realise i have been living a corporeal dream not different to dreams
during sleep -

a comforting, swirling light within me
begins to grow brighter until its luminescence becomes brighter than all the stars in the firmament

who am I?
not the person in the mirror or the character that seeks outside itself
i have simply become what i have always been
that consistency,
the immutable, the inviolable luminescence of my being,
brighter than the midday sun and warmer than the night

i was before i was born and continue to be after i die i have become
continuum,
a state i share with Creation it becomes plain that i am pure unconditioned Being and i wonder why it took so long to wake to my (Real) identity do what you will world, chimeras are incapable

of making an impression in this transmuting light

in singular, relentless pursuit
i have become everything that ever was or will be,
i am everywhere at One free of limiting conceptions and the prison of finite thought