

The Two Party Political Charade in Oz ..

by jess Thursday, May 14 2015, 10:07am

international / prose / post

which clearly serves elite interests, maintain their status as the only two horses in the race, even though it is broadly known that both parties are owned by the same plutocratic stable – the colours they wear are purely for show, and that is the point. While only two major parties exist that are capable of forming a real government, the people are stuck with one political agenda regardless of the vote they cast. And it always turns out the same, what can we do for you now Washington and the corporate banker elite? The situation is sickening, as ‘democracy’ – government by and for the MAJORITY – becomes a meaningless word.

'Lablib' - Shorten and Abbott

Representative government in Australia died with the CIA instigated removal of Australia's first and last real statesman, Gough Whitlam, and if you imagine that worker leaders such as Hawke or Keating had the best interests of the people and nation at heart then why were they often pictured puffing cigars after dinner with the plutocratic elite? It was Labor treasurer and eventual leader, Paul Keating, who deregulated the banks and opened the door to the implementation of parasitic service fees, which occurred almost overnight, and if that traitorous act did not expose Labor's scumbags, Keating then surrendered our sovereign currency to the rogues (proven) on Wall Street and Oz has been a economic slave nation to the elite ever since. You see, it was the leaders of the workers Labor Party that sold their political soul to the devil, as conservatives make no attempt to hide the fact they serve elite corporate interests and not the majority.

Politics in Oz is now a transparent game of charades and the losers of course are the people that refuse, despite all the overwhelming evidence, which would fill a book, to remedy the two party charade.

Consider Labor leader, Kevin Rudd, who attended a job interview for PM at lunch in New York with Rupert Murdoch – give Oz a break! And backstabbing Gillard who flagged her readiness to serve corporate elites by attempting to pass a bill, while deputy leader, which would enable Corporate bosses to have legal access to the private emails and other digital communications of their employees, she pre-empted the NSA publicly on this issue – needless to say, she received the support of the elite and got the job she so dearly coveted for so long.

Both major parties now practise deception politics on the people while pledging their souls to non-representative corporate elites – and don't the people know it!

So what to do in one of the wealthiest per capita nations on earth? Simple, dump both parties PERMANENTLY and teach the plutocrats that their dog and pony show is over – and make no mistake, dumping both major parties simply means cutting the legs from under the plutocratic elite; both major parties are hollow shells today.

Of course, this simple action requires courage as parliament would become momentarily chaotic, however, from the chaos, which would expose all the sordid machinations of professional politicians, a people's choice may emerge as a true democratic leader that is not subject to the bribery or offers of corporate elites. Moreover, any option is better than the current status quo and most Aussies know it – flush ALL the LYING, unrepresentative bastards down the sewer from which they emerged or continue to suffer the progressively harsher consequences of installing disingenuous, deceitful, anti-democratic governments.

The system is clearly broken and irredeemable as it stands.

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-1611.html>