

Forfeiting Freedom

by zed Monday, May 25 2015, 3:05am

international / prose / post

Have you ever asked yourself, “what does the State think it’s doing spying on ALL citizens?” Probably not, as the question demands an answer and that answer would have translated into action to curtail all (clearly unnecessary) pan surveillance.

Balinese Shadow Puppets

However, the reality is that pan-surveillance has been quietly accepted by those willing to gift their precious and most personal freedoms to the State. This acquiescence extends to tolerating blatantly criminal hacking attempts of all Android devices by State ‘security agencies’ which are today plainly Orwellian Big Brothers hell bent on containing/enslaving the masses, and make no mistake, to surrender one’s personal privacy and the freedom that privacy affords is to become a slave to the forces that attempt to rob us of our precious privacy.

So we are forced to deal with issues of slavery, which comes in two major categories, those that willingly adopt slavery and those slaves that fight to break the chains that bind them and gain their freedom. But sadly the latter category is of course the minority, as courage is required to fight for and maintain one’s freedoms and courage is plainly a very rare commodity these days.

So Plato’s bound slaves live in a spiritually bankrupt world of shadows with no knowledge of the real world in which they live. The shadow masters have little difficulty playing shadow games and so entire populations passively accept the most heinous crimes of mass murder and the most searing injustices abroad and at home.

For the above category nothing can be done as only slaves that are willing to fight and pursue their liberties and freedoms are worthy of the prize they fight for, as freedom, liberty and justice are earned never bestowed.

So the issue or struggle reduces to the personal not the broad or impersonal, as without personal freedom they can be no hope of social freedom.

In a pan-surveillance society the most free are the unidentifiable or anonymous, as identity is the locating/oppressive factor and clearly one is able to do what one pleases if one is essentially invisible, though like the invisible man whose movements and actions can be seen it becomes a simple matter to evade detection or 'capture.'

Unsurprisingly, numerous spying devices saturate modern surveillance slave societies, they are appropriately called 'smart' devices, which in most cases are far too smart for most of their users, as they were intentionally designed to be. And forget the notion that this outcome is mere coincidence or for user convenience as the pattern is perfectly coherent for pan-surveillance societies.

The creator of the Android OS is Google which company is on record for partnering with CIA front companies, an IT news release today reveals that factory resets on most Android devices do not delete data, which has been recovered as proof of concept by security consultants; anyone that imagines this is an accidental flaw or vulnerability is deluding themselves given Google's open relationship with spy agencies and the pan-surveillance environment we live in today. In the past 'backdoors,' demanded by the State, were discovered in all Microsoft operating systems and so this trend is not accidental but on the contrary is a deliberate attempt to spy and therefore enslave - there are many more instances of corporations complying with State agencies including IC or hardware backdoors embedded in CPUs or processors. So it appears we are 'up against it,' as almost every digital device we use is able to spy on us, whether we like it or not.

But are we? Take the allusion to the invisible man, the anonymous among us, their devices indeed spy on the registered user but that registered user need not be the real person that uses the device - it really is that simple to thwart all attempts by the State to track everyone. Personally, as the current struggle is personal, I use numerous tablets, computers and other digital devices all of which only reveal the bogus user and user account though some expertise is required to maintain the situation but it is not too difficult a task.

Clearly, anyone that fights to maintain their liberties, privacy, therefore FREEDOM, is worthy to be FREE! As for the rest, good luck in your dim, ignorant, captured world of shadows and self-censored or confined, acquiescent slavery.

It should be clearly understood without me stating it that the most efficient means of creating an enslaved society is to attack personal privacy, the fundamental core freedom from which all other freedoms issue. Why do we allow a bunch of PROVEN mass murdering, psychopathic control freaks to unjustifiably hyper-intrude on our personal lives and enslave us -- they cannot do it without our co-operation?

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-1631.html>