

Puppet Obama Declares the 'Perpetual War' Doctrine of the Neocons

Perhaps a little background is warranted for victims of the 24/hour corporate media 'news/propaganda' cycle.

I know it's difficult but it happened only yesterday so try and remember Cheney and Rumsfeld declaring, on behalf of weapons corporations like Lockheed Martin, which has produced the world's most expensive flying lemon, the F-35 strike fighter, that the war on al-Qaeda - which numbered, according to US military estimates, about 235 fighters at its peak, would be a "long (perpetual) war!" Both corporate serving lackeys made their statements publicly so Youtube may still have the incriminating videos, notwithstanding that corporate Google censors like crazy to protect the corporate agenda/status quo.

The absurdity of this claim at the time was apparent to military professionals world-wide, as al-Qaeda was not a real threat, it was the Taliban in Afghanistan that posed and continue to pose the major problem for western imperialists in that nation. So the USA while declaring perpetual war on a few hundred rag-tag al-Qaeda fighters was forced to mount a campaign against the Taliban instead, which it lost after 12 years of fighting and massive profits for weapons manufacturers. The point is the premature declaration of the 'perpetual war' doctrine by Rumsfeld and Cheney, which (war) is the only strong card the US possesses, and as General Wesley Clark, retired, once publicly stated, "I guess, if you only have a hammer then every problem becomes a nail!" And that is exactly what the problem is today, as the USA only has one viable on-shore industry, the weapons/techno industry.

It needs repeating here that the published Neocon PNAC document, declaring that America could only maintain its 'sole' (no longer true) superpower status was via military means/expansionism. So doodle dandies, join up fight and die, not for your country but corporate profits and imperialism, though you may wish to question veterans dumped on the social scrapheap after their usefulness expired, whether corporate wars are worth fighting and dying for?

Yesterday, remember(?) what did puppet president extra-ordinaire Obama declare, like a broken record, 'perpetual war' of course, though the latest US created proxy fighting force, ISIL, has been beefed up substantially so as to appear like a real 'international' threat, notwithstanding it has been exposed by numerous analysts that this group is a CIA creation supported by US Gulf States and other regional vassals, including Israel -- remember the Zionists screaming about the Saddam threat, but hardly a murmur about ISIL, which doesn't seem to regard the Jewish State as a traditional arch-enemy, 'oddly' enough.

What I am not so subtly hinting at is that the pretext of 'perpetual war' is a sales sham to sell and sustain the last on-shore industries that continue to make HUGE profits on the misery, blood and guts of innocent civilians and duped American banjo players that enlist to fight created wars to sustain corporations and their combined bid (including large banking interests) to dominate the world using the Pentagon as its criminal strong arm, mafia style!

However, Neocon nut cases may have overreached by threatening China and Russia whose combined strength could easily vanquish the 'sole' superpower; welcome to REALITY, doodles and dreamboats alike -- perpetual war my ass!
