

THE Problem is Moral Disintegration NOT Oligarchs and Plutocrats

I have just completed reading the bleating of commentators such as Pilger of the UK and Hedges of the US; both writers are currently discoursing on the topic of the day, the tragedy of Greece's capitulation to neoliberal greed and plutocratic standover tactics yet both commentators easily fall prey to these forces by inadvertently depicting their enemies, the oligarchs and plutocrats, as winners and to counter these radical, truly revolutionary forces both writers offer a nineteenth century ideological solution, to "fight," physically [implied].

However, I wonder to whom they are appealing, who is going to do the 'fighting' TODAY, a bunch of senior citizen hippies, that in their youth did fight and win their fight to end the Vietnam War or three 'me' generations too busy taking 'selfies' to see a world past their own narcissistic noses - which condition was intentionally designed, I would add?

So please qualify the "fight" in a REAL WORLD scenario rather than constantly pump out antiquated socialist CRAP that does no-one any good as the days of old-fashioned revolution and mass mobilisation are over, or haven't you dinosaur wankers noticed the real problem yet?

Probably not, as both commentators are far too busy serving an INEFFECTIVE, dreamboat audience.

Surely, men of your intelligence and long experience are aware of the times? THE problem is not criminal elites, which have been with us since day one, it is the PEOPLE, the masses, the captured digital generations that allowed those criminals to rise rapidly to the almost unassailable power positions they occupy today and urging dead-heads, pensioners and gutless wonders to rebel from your very safe writing desks is a monumental travesty of your integrity and a loud declaration of your ignorance.

If you wish to urge others to fight then pick up a gun, baton or bomb and lead by example or desist in constantly advertising your ossified, irrelevant thinking. Even if you took to the streets with arms, I could assure you that few would follow your lead as there is no-one effectively listening.

Pilger made reference to the postmodern sell-outs of Greece, the highly educated, privileged echelon of the pseudo revolutionary, Syriza party/government. Indeed, postmodern is a correct assessment but for all the wrong reasons, Mr Pilger.

The criminal elites achieved their power via post-modern thought and strategies, the captured, useless 'me' generations of hedonists and narcissists became enslaved with 'features' on their techno-gadgets, which take better pictures and videos while tracking and snooping on everything the user does, how convenient. These new techno 'smart' devices were intentionally designed to attract to the point where captured generations line the streets to obtain first releases of new gadgets, for fuck's sake, can't you see how it's done in a postmodern age or is that too much to ask from living fossils of a bygone era that continue to pump antiquated, ineffective material for a few dreamers and pimplly masturbators?

Postmodern methods defy prescribed patterns and doctrinal thinking, postmodern thought is lateral to the extreme and always surprises by producing unexpected results, something dinosaur socialists are unable to apprehend, it seems.

I suggest that you both get with the amorphous reality of the times before you make fools of yourselves - "fight," indeed. You must first restore MORALITY to an intentionally created spiritually bankrupt culture before you ask people to defend it.
