

Greece Suicides -- Draconian Austerity demands pass through traitorous Parliament

by darcy Thursday, Jul 16 2015, 3:55am

international / prose / post

Greece's fate was sealed when Brussels, with its eye on Greece's currency printing presses, saw they failed to roll. With the knowledge that Greece had not prepared for a default/exit, or plan B, Brussels hit as hard as was possible and destroyed Greece as an independent, sovereign nation, who is to blame if blame should be apportioned?

Without doubt the former finance minister, Yanis Varoufakis, who now hides behind the thin mandate argument that the Greek people wanted their cake and to eat it, no austerity and to stay with the Euro, could have at least prepared for an exit option regardless of how many "trucks" he required - give thinking people a break! Any lay person could have told him that alleviating imposed austerity and maintaining membership in the Eurozone was IMPOSSIBLE, notwithstanding that Varoufakis is a highly intelligent man but one that clearly is in need of a spine.

Varoufakis and his leader Alexis Tsipras failed Greece, pure and simple, by not at least sending a clear message to Brussels that they were preparing for an exit - Brussels and Washington would have shit their pants at the prospect and 'determination' (feigned or not) as Greece's exit would have signalled the end of the Eurozone, the EU and NATO. Now that's how you play the game Yanis, you are not only a traitor to Greece but your adopted Australia, where simple poker tactics are practised by children.

The financial fascists of the Eurozone couldn't believe their luck and the stupidity of Greece's government - Greeks, in view of their long history, know too well how to prepare for the unexpected, or at the very least, prepare to survive as an independent nation. The so-called 'leftist' Syriza party is now a meaningless ideological shell, its betrayal couldn't have been more pronounced and severe for the nation - surrendering State assets to bankers is beyond belief when a traumatic but sovereign exit was an available option, and don't tell me the Greek people wouldn't have understood.

The international banking elite has not only hollowed out Greece, everything of value, they have defeated its democratically elected government and succeeded in sending a message to all leftist governments in Europe that Greece's fate awaits them if they dare to resist austerity/enslavement.

However, it's not over until the fat, leftist lady sings, regardless of parliament's capitulation - a democratic nation is ruled by the people, so the world, including Brussels and Washington, waits to see what the Greek people will do, notwithstanding the shocking and de-spiriting events that have recently unfolded.

No financial elite is able to withstand a popular uprising, pure and simple, and if tanks are deployed then the show of the Eurozone becomes apparent to all, a common currency spells SLAVERY and economic dictatorship for less wealthy nations.

I'm sorry Yanis, you may be a typical Greek, but you're a failed Aussie.

Real regime change in Greece could occur internally to displace the external annihilation of Syriza - but beware the fascists in Greece and the Eurozone.

The Greek population is able to force an exit as a last nation-saving measure, as the traitorous parliament has already surrendered. Are you up to the task Greece, or would you prefer to eat shit until Brussels decides to change the menu to vomit?

<http://www.dw.com/en/greece-tsipras-wins-austerity-vote-but-watches-syriza-split/a-18586527>

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-1731.html>