

A Dose of Reality about Runaway Climate Change

by claire Tuesday, Aug 18 2015, 12:17am

international / prose / post

Dire warnings were given by government scientific research bodies back in '73, that date refers to the Australian CSIRO, however, corporate lobby groups and bought lackey politicians all refuted the claims though they didn't have any scientific evidence to back their groundless refutations at the time, so polluting corporations enlisted the services of a number of compliant scientists to support the myth that pollution induced rapid climate change was nonsense. Well today we should all know better.

Had we listened to our specialists at the time we could have mitigated the dire effects of climate change and environmental destabilisation but profit-only driven corporations with their mountains of corruption money won the day.

In time climate change became undeniable and so large bankers formulated a means by which they could profit from climate catastrophe, they put their avaricious heads together and formulated the ETS model of carbon trading, Goldman Sachs was a principal in these arrangements.

However, the earth now faces runaway climate change due to inaction when it was required, the "tipping point" was passed back in the late eighties according to informed scientists, which makes the money-grubbing banker model obsolete, though they will surely succeed in implementing it as profit rules not sense or reason. But as the following video indicates it's far too little too late. Climate change is now a runaway train. But of course we should now increase the coffers of bankers by allowing the ETS con to be implemented by of course bought lackey politicians.

The other aspect is the lack of action which WAS required by the public which would have seen an abrupt end to pollution producing corporations, regardless of the inconvenience and cost; civilisation has had many such abrupt technological and social changes in the past.

The major failure was as usual apathy by the public, but every action and inaction comes at a cost. Today that cost would be an ETS money-grubbing exercise and total environmental disruption impacting clean water availability, food production and the air we breathe -- it really couldn't get much worse you may imagine but it shall. As climate realities confront nations they will engage in armed conflict in order to take possession of the remaining resources available. So now you face the costs of your apathy and complacency, and now you have an excuse to pursue hedonism and narcissism.

My advice to all the dreamboats out there is to continue texting, taking selfies and indulging in hedonistic pursuits as the show is over. Nefarious ruling elites responsible for the current catastrophe have of course been hoarding wealth and purchasing large swathes of arable and soon to be arable land around the globe. But please be sure to fall for their now useless ETS con and continue to be distracted by the titillations they constantly feed you via their mass media.

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-1791.html>