

Ignorance is Slavery Not Bliss

by nano Tuesday, Sep 1 2015, 12:49am

international / prose / post

The only hope a slave has of a 'good life' is to have a benign master that appreciates that slaves are a valuable and dangerous asset to be treated well in order to maintain work performance and to mitigate any inclination to rebel. But what happens when slaves are abundant or in over supply? Slaves become expendable, which eliminates the need for care and humane treatment, they become little more than disposable commodities to be treated with contempt by their masters.

Slavery has never been eliminated though chains of bondage have become more subtle today. The vast majority of human beings and sovereign nations are debt-enslaved by their mega-wealthy masters that print money – the modern equivalent of chains – from thin air. People, indeed entire nations, today are financially oppressed and their living conditions are less comfortable in relative terms than the house slaves of the ancient Roman Empire.

Due to over-supply slaves now compete with each other for the few crumbs their masters leave on the table and hardly if ever entertain the notion of real freedom and unifying to overwhelm their cruel masters; ironically freedom is far easier to gain today than it ever was in the past, unity is the only requisite as the numbers are overwhelming.

However, due to the need of each slave to simply survive, slaves are anything but unified though their degraded conditions should have created a universal brother/sister hood too powerful for any force on earth to contain or contend with. Slave masters are also aware of this simple and dangerous reality, so measures, technological and regulatory have already been created to contain and oppress the masses and of course to protect elite slave masters – or haven't you noticed new para-military police with extended powers and pan-intrusion/individual surveillance in almost every developed nation on earth? These measures were implemented on the pretext of keeping slaves safe while the easily ascertained truth indicates that these measures were/are designed to keep slave masters safe from their slaves.

Enslaved human herds are incapable of co-operative endeavours without masters to lead them, as is clearly evident today, entire populations slave away for a handful of known corrupt, wealthy, callous CRIMINAL minorities.

Some say a certain threshold must first be reached before the masses are galvanised into action, others say the optimum method is SHOCK, such as a 9/11 or other orchestrated 'catastrophe.' However, modern history reveals another means facilitated by the digital revolution, remember the 650,000 Latinos that flooded the streets of LA when Bush announced a crackdown on illegals; that show of peaceful FORCE was enough for the US executive to reverse that policy and so the slaves retreated with their miniscule slice of turkey.

Recently, digital technology enabled the Australian public to hit the streets within hours of an announcement of a draconian fascist policing measure that was to be perpetrated against the people of Australia, in the form of randomly checking people for their visas or identity papers. That exercise was also immediately cancelled as a result of the immediate protest, though less in numbers to LA.

You see, slave masters are TERRIFIED of the prospect of triggering a runaway movement which could escalate into a full blown reformation/revolution so they IMMEDIATELY defuse the situation and capitulate, though the lesson seems lost on slaves that have real freedom and unity literally at their fingertips.

---

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-1828.html>