

"I have cast fire upon the world, and see, I am watching over it until it blazes."

by fish Wednesday, Nov 18 2015, 10:20am

international / prose / post

The title is a quote from the Gospel of Thomas attributed to the mythic Christ and before you knee-jerk and imagine I'm some sort of religionist nut, I would state that I am a cultural analyst and my researches and studies bear much fruit, as you will see, read on.

The quote is attributed to a social reformer, one that made no attempt to hide his intentions to reform the corrupt, elite-ruled society in which he lived. Jesus detested wealth, concentrated power and exclusivity and so he embarked on the road to revolution, as the above quote indicates. However, the quote also indicates how social manipulation is achieved.

Now consider the first CIA created terrorist group -- al-Qaeda -- utilised effectively by the government of the day; it succeeded in facilitating grossly illegal wars (which continue today) and other oppressive and socially horrendous activities by elite serving, puppet governments, however, it also failed in one critical area, it failed to become a universal threat in order to facilitate oppressive police state control of huge populations. Nevertheless, if at first you don't succeed, enter ISIL the next attempt at universal terror, and the excuse for greater social oppression.

The failure of al-Qaeda was its inability to extend its threat universally; US military sources themselves assessed al-Qaeda's membership at its peak to be approximately 350 individuals, big fail, as a universal terror threat was desired by nefarious elites.

The major distinction that separates al-Qaeda and ISIL is the latter's use of sophisticated mass media technologies to recruit an assortment of inbred, morons and disturbed alienated idiots to its ranks to murder and self-destruct in order to enter paradise, where I would add numerous virgins wait for 'martyrs' (morons) to utilise them as sex objects, believe it or not but be assured, the duped pea-brains in ISIL do.

Now let's alter the title a little to better understand, "I have cast 'terror' upon the world, and see, I am watching over it until it blazes." ISIL has achieved, with the indispensable support of the CFR directed western mass media, universal threat status, and need I explain how puppet governments are exploiting the created threat situation to further their nefarious aims? I would add that the saturation coverage of the Paris false flag attacks, though much greater tragedies have occurred, continues unabated as I write; now let's see if YOU are able to predict the rest.

ISIL has become that universal "blaze" but not for benign purposes. The entire apparatus is one huge deadly contrivance, nevertheless, ISIL is easily defeated by simply cutting off its support networks, which primarily issue from the USA/NATO and Gulf States. Laws exist to hold any person, State or group accountable for supplying material support/aid to terrorists.

I was sort of hoping that Jesus could have extrapolated and mentioned that a simple change in 'wind direction' would consume the 'fire casters.' Maybe next time around.

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-1985.html>