

Woe to ISIL and its Puppet Masters -- Russia Declares War

Putin has declared war on ISIL terrorists and those that harbour and support them for the attack on a Russian civilian airliner. The difference between Putin's and US/NATO declarations of war is that Russia's are LEGAL under international law and UN charters, while the USA and NATO continue their illegal wars in various regions around the world. Putin possesses the proof he requires to attack various Gulf States and Turkey though it has not been made public as yet. Nevertheless, the USA, Israel, NATO, Gulf States and Jordan are acutely aware of the fact and their complicity/culpability.

The criminal Western plan to redraw the borders of the Middle East and depose any leader that stands in the way has abruptly been stifled by Putin, what's more all he need do is release the PROOF of US and NATO support for its proxy fighting force ISIL and the 'jig is up!' Facing this incriminating threat from Russia the criminal USA and its vassals have no alternative but to wage war on Russia under some contrived pretext or another. And so the old adage of 'tangled webs of deceit' has now become a reality for Washington and its client States.

Daesh/ISIL militants flown safely out of Syria to Fight with Saudis in Yemen

Over 1,000 militants have arrived in the Yemeni city of Aden to join the Daesh Takfiri terrorists in the war-torn country and fight against the Houthi Ansarullah fighters.

"Hundreds of armed militants who came from other provinces of Yemen and from abroad started their training in the Salah al-Din camp in Aden," an unnamed Yemeni security source told Russia's Sputnik news agency on Wednesday.

The Yemeni source said that the exact number of the reinforcements is not yet known but approximately between 1,500 to 2,000 militants have come to the southern port city to fight alongside the terror group.

He added that during the past few days a number of airplanes with hundreds of militants aboard had landed at the city's airport "under condition of high secrecy and reinforced security."

On Tuesday, the spokesman of the Syrian Armed Forces, Brigadier General Ali Mayhoub, said that two planes from Turkey, one from the United Arab Emirates, and another from Qatar had transported 500 Daesh terrorists fleeing from Syria to an airport in Aden. [My emphasis.]

According to Mayhoub, these militants, transported from Syria to save them from Russian airstrikes, are supposed to take part in a ground operation against Yemen's Houthi Ansarullah fighters.

"[Daesh] militants were met by officers from the Saudi-led coalition, who took them out of the [Yemeni] airport in three groups," he further said, adding that two groups were taken to two locations in Yemen and a third one was sent to the Saudi provinces of Asir and Jizan, in the south and southeast, respectively.

Ansarullah fighters allied with Yemen's army units are resisting against the unabated Saudi military aggression on the war-torn country.

Yemen has been under Saudi airstrikes on a daily basis since the regime in Riyadh launched its military aggression against the impoverished nation on March 26, in a bid to undermine the Houthi Ansarullah movement and restore power to the fugitive former president, Abd Rabbuh Mansour Hadi, a staunch ally of Riyadh.

About 7,000 people have lost their lives in the Saudi air raids, and a total of nearly 14,000 people have been injured since the beginning of the Saudi aggression.
