

Putin Caves to Western Provocation

Forget Turkey's role in this direct US/NATO affront - SU-24 shootdown -- to Putin, who was basking in his self-deluded fantasies regarding his successful campaign in Syria. We note from Putin's feeble response in a meeting with the King of Jordan (interesting timing) that the US/NATO initiative to test Russia's resolve and true capability was successful in the sense that it confirmed that Putin is unwilling to assert his legal rights and nation's prerogatives when directly provoked regarding a proportionate military response to an unwarranted and outrageous attack on a Russian warplane conducting legal and UN sanctioned missions to eliminate the terrorist threat in the region.

Putin

How much more support do you need before you affirm and ACT on your rights and prerogatives Mr 'mouse' Putin?

Make no mistake, US/NATO officials were acutely aware that this situation could have provoked a nuclear war, and that possibility is exactly the point, they wished to discover what Putin would do when faced with a NATO/US threat - and as the entire world now knows Putin CAVED. In other words, faced with Putin's demonstrations of his upgraded military's capability, which was impressive to say the least, the West desired to know above all else and even at a cost, whether or not Putin was capable of waging total war on the western alliance. Well, they got their answer and so Mr Putin, get ready to pay through the nose for your undisguised cowardice, as YOU are the best indicator of Russian's real strength against western forces, you stupid, cowardly former spy, do you not see the ploy NOW and the consequences of your disgraceful, gutless (non)actions?

I have to laugh at times when I read the fawning adulation of Putin in the alternative media, by writers such as Escobar and Whitney, who entirely miss the point, it matters not whether Russia matches or even outperforms the allied military, it's of no consequence if the Russian leader and his officials are C-O-W-A-R-D-S, though Putin's capitulation is not necessarily a true indication of Russian military strength, however, Putin's behaviour sure is a credible measure and the West is running with it at full speed, but please don't believe me just keep your biased eyes open, you donkey analysts and commentators!

Now, I've heard it all before regarding how no-one wants a nuclear war, well perhaps, no-one except the western alliance if it imagines it could prevail and let's not forget Richard Perle's infamous revealing statement a few years back, to paraphrase, 'what's the point of having nuclear weapons if you don't use them' - that is the mentality of neocon nut cases that determine foreign policy in Washington TODAY.

It's no secret that the western alliance is hell-bent on world domination and is willing to sacrifice billions of innocent lives to achieve its psychopathic goal or are we going to start swallowing the feeble propaganda and all its perception management marketing tricks? The only hope for relative peace and a non-escalation would have been if Putin was ready to assert Russia's rights and legal prerogatives, which forfeited opportunity would have most likely resulted in a backdown by western forces, as their test provocation would have indicated that indeed, Russia was ready, equipped and willing to fight total war if it was forced to, you silly amateur commentators and dimwits.

The problem of today's masses and media buffoons and lackeys is they think like civilians and not generals that are trained to win in military conflicts, you see dummies, real military men understand better than anyone else that winning is the imperative of war regardless of the cost to a civilian population, as history is always written by the victor and blame of course is always attributed to the vanquished, you mindless dunces. Now watch what develops as a result of Putin's catastrophic cave-in, and I hope that Putin and his adulators choke on it.
