

Taking the Fight to the Plutocrats

In an American age of the 'disposition matrix,' a euphemism for secretly and unaccountably selecting targets for Obama's extra-judicial, mafia kill list, it seems that people have 'taken the fight to the plutocrats;' transnational ExxonMobil oil exec, Nicholas Mockford, was assassinated in Brussels on October 14 after leaving a restaurant.

It seems people are learning fast these days, former White House press secretary, Robert Gibbs, recently defined the grossly illegal drone strikes and presidential kill lists as "taking the fight to the terrorists." Well, with this example set, the people it seems are now taking the fight directly to the REAL terrorists behind (all) the oil and resource wars waged over the past decade. I refer to the corporate executive class on whose behalf the Pentagon and militaries from US client States, wage their despicable, civilian killing, illegal wars.

The spin and deflection has already commenced, we wouldn't want an executive killing trend to become fashionable now, would we?

While I personally do not condone any killing for whatever reason, the assassination of a Transnational oil executive behind millions of civilian deaths is not surprising given the brazen criminality of western militaries these days.

After a decade of flagrant lies and deceit from our puppet political leaders, it appears that the tired rhetoric is failing. Despite attempts by Google and other SEs to suppress alternative news, the masses have responded to the flood of alternative sources with increased awareness and direct action.

The arrogance of the executive class may have taken a gut hit; we shall see. If another exec from Wall St, the 'City' or the Reserve Banking System, Goldman Sachs, JP Morgan etc, takes a hit then confirmation of a retaliatory response from citizens against the 'disposition matrix' criminality of ruling elites and their political servants, would seem a certainty -- here's hoping; it's not as though militant activists are short on targets!

Perhaps unrepresentative political puppet to minority ruling elites may also become the most dangerous job on the planet -- again, here's hoping!
