

Chilcot: The Clearly PARTIAL Hague Court Refuses to Prosecute Blair

by claire Tuesday, Jul 12 2016, 9:08pm

international / prose / post

Let's start with the obvious: The Hague criminal court has no problem prosecuting leaders of other States, as its record indicates, yet it refuses to investigate Blair's crimes; instead it attempts to throw-off on the UK military when clearly Blair, Bush and Howard are responsible for the most horrific murderous event of the 21st century, which subsequent effects continue to DESTABILISE the Middle East, Europe and the WORLD. The only effective way to prevent further criminal incidences of this nature is to PROSECUTE KNOWN WAR CRIMINALS TODAY.

Clearly the Hague courts are biased, plain to see. Perceived enemies of the western criminal alliance are easily prosecuted at the Hague but not western (now proven) criminal leaders. Now what does that outrageous bias suggest to you? Of course, a corrupt politicised court that serves certain minority elite interests but not JUSTICE.

However, Blair's fate remains in the hands of the British people, a nationwide petition to parliament would easily see Blair charged, indicted and held to account -- in other words, the British PEOPLE, exercising their democratic prerogatives, are able to determine Blair's fate in a British court and to hell with the farcical, partial Hague courts.

So people, if you wish to see JUSTICE SERVED get to work and lodge that petition to the British parliament, of course supported by millions of signatures DEMANDING that Blair is held to account; parliament could hardly ignore it! Otherwise accept the injustice of a horrendous and tragic, avoidable war and whatever else may stem from that criminal misadventure in the future.

<http://tinyurl.com/j4gug9l>