

Underestimating China's Strength is one of China's Strongest Weapons

by kuang Sunday, Dec 18 2016, 12:56am

international / prose / post

China is an ancient culture which has been wracked with internal wars throughout its LONG history -- in comparison America is an infant(ile) nation in EVERY regard. The world's most famous treatise on war, espionage and political tactics, studied in leading military academies throughout the world TODAY, was written by a Chinese General and master strategist, Sun Tzu, THOUSANDS of years past.

I would now refer to Trump's obsession with China as an enemy of the USA. Trump is currently huffing and puffing about the recent capture of a US navy submersible SURVEILLANCE drone by China. However, we should first note that Trump has been consistent in his attitude toward China from day one, a rarity, as he is inconsistent on everything else, so we should take particular note of this fact.

Now in the context of three COMPETING superpowers, Trump has chosen not to vilify and attack Russia, considered the greatest danger to the US by the establishment, but Trump rants endlessly against China while making friendly gestures toward Russia, China's most powerful ally. Indeed, a conflict with Russia and China would see America OBLITERATED and the two Asian nations victorious though any such war would be lunacy. Nevertheless, by sheer military (combined) force and population numbers China and Russia would prevail, leaving the North American continent irradiated for hundreds of thousands of years, in other words any such aggressive move is doom for America. So what to do? Of course, attempt to alter existing alliances.

I find it extra-ordinary that few analysts and commentators have given this critical aspect of geopolitical affairs the attention it deserves, as it would appear that a strategy is currently being played out. However, is Trump really so smart, I think not but the man is deceptive to the extreme and has PROVEN he is able to contend with TOTAL mass media opposition against him, which is revolutionary, as that prospect was never considered by any politician in the world prior to Trump, demonstrating with ease how easily it actually is to destroy the 'undefeatable' (until Trump) western media. Bravo you rascal, though I admit I am unable to assess Trump as easily as other leaders that rule in the world today; for example, Obama is child's play, when applying existing analytical methods, he is a complete lackey, taking it up the arse where he likes it and serving with unquestioning obedience, the elite interests that placed him in office.

But to return to Trump and China and the fact that two allied superpowers would easily prevail (in every aspect) over one. So could it really be a considered, planned strategy by Trump to divide and conquer? Putin sure looks like he has fallen for Trump's friendly gestures, indeed, could Putin be so stupid? Well yes, he was deceived by the Bush administration and allowed Russia to be surrounded on its land borders with offensive missile installations, for which act of treason he received huge payments in western cash, Putin is as corrupt as they come, a well known fact in Russia and to insider Americans.

So could this game of chaos and political uncertainty that now has the west entirely confused be an intentional planned strategy equal to the cunning genius of Sun Tzu? That is the trillion dollar question.

If so it would be a well thought out genius strategy, consider for a moment how political uncertainty prevails among the masses and the so-called expert analysts and commentators out of the loop. Now understand that sowing uncertainty allows an attacker a HUGE advantage or an inside malevolent, subversive force a huge lead.

While the entire world is fascinated with the inane arguments of Trump's presidency, almost everyone has overlooked what appears to be a very cunning strategy to divide and/or subvert the existing Sino-Russian alliance.

Now China is not a passive player, though it pretends to be, a few really expert analysts have known that a war between Russia and America, would see China stall on its support for its ally, hoping of course that such a war would escalate so fast as to reduce both opposing nations to shadows of their former power and status, which would of course allow China to EASILY finish the job and prevail over the entire WORLD, how very typical of an Asian strategy -- so no-one can be trusted, which is common political fare. A delightful situation for a genius strategist, who either has the western media completely fucked, which is not too difficult, or is this just another dastardly evil elite tactic?

At this stage the situation requires a little more material for analysis as I do not pretend to be privy to any insider information or in any 'loop'; however, very soon, due to the nature of this extremely critical game, good analysts, unswayed by intentional media confusion and uncertainty, will know the Truth. And it may be a very sorry day for some.

<https://www.theguardian.com/us-news/2016/dec/17/donald-trump-china-unpresidential-act-us-navy-drone>

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-2450.html>