Give thinking people a break! The UK Telegraph recently published details of a 'Russian' plot to assassinate the leader of the minuscule (600,000 population) statelet of Montenegro, formerly part of surgically divided, by NATO/US, Yugoslavia.

We are expected to believe that the 'Russians' were so enraged by Montenegro's desire to join NATO that they decided to assassinate its leader, which, if they wished, he would already be dead. The absurd plot described by the Telegraph is not even worthy of an airport book stand spy novel.

Political assassinations follow very specific guidelines/rules, the foremost being using the LEAST possible operatives, one is the ideal. However, the Telegraph story details almost an army of assassins and accomplices, which of course flies in the face of security protocols and a successful assassination, as the more people involved the more likely the chance of exposure. Now dig this, aside from 'numerous Russian' agents a 'team' of Serbian nationalists were to don police uniforms and shoot at the crowd attending an election day speech delivered by the leader of Montenegro, a script that would be rejected by any publisher of hack spy novels. This absurd spraying of civilians was intended to compromise the government and prove them to be traitors serving western interests, notwithstanding the huge risk of capture such an 'army' of assassins presented, again give thinking people a break.

I mean really, if the American 'deep state' and NATO are so desperate to compromise Russia and Putin they really need to do a lot better than this ridiculous, phony, assassination story, which, as I said, would have been rejected by publishers of a hack spy or detective novel.

Now recall how tiny States, with minimal resources, in the past have used one person to take out an opponent, 'umbrella' air guns which shoot tiny ricin infused projectiles, one of which was only discovered much later during a postmortem, which of course afforded plenty of time for the operative/assassin to escape the scene and depart for the homeland after sun bathing in Rio, give me a break, UK Telegraph! Now the described successful assassination occurred decades past and today's assassins have far more deadly and unobtrusive means to dispense with anyone they choose.

Now consider the US deep state's murder of JFK, a bungled job to be sure, the framing and subsequent murder before trial of patsy Lee Harvey Oswald has been exposed by digital technology, which proved beyond doubt that a picture released by the CIA of Oswald holding the assassination weapon and strapped with a sidearm, cowboy style, was a phony cut and manually pasted very crude composite photograph, there was no photoshop in those days. And that notwithstanding the digitally enhanced picture of the two real assassins on the grassy knoll that delivered the fatal shot from a position situated directly in front of the target not from behind in the book depository. These two hired assassins (gangsters) were killed by the CIA shortly after killing Kennedy in order to prevent exposure or blackmail after the event.

Now utilising the 'services' of these two external fools that should have known they were marked for instant death, compromises the plot and leaves it wide open to exposure. That is why it's imperative that very few operatives are utilised for these types of killings, now compare with the football teams described by the UK Telegraph (link below) and laugh.

To conclude the JFK now exposed murder; if you haven't ascertained who killed Kennedy think CIA who were forced to kill the external assassins and frame patsy Oswald, the CIA were also forced to go on a killing spree and murder all the innocent civilian witnesses that could have compromised the deep state's heinous act and phony story. So who is the most likely perpetrator of the UK Telegraph's absurd story of an attempt on the life of the leader of Montenegro, take a guess?
