Trains

by jude Friday, Jun 9 2017, 12:21pm international / poetry / post it passed like a fast country train heading who knows where, i was heading the other way it rattled past like a gatling gun faces blurred in windows as it sped into the distance so many trains and stations with various skins from black to white in so many lands, speeding past a station assistant approached and asked which train i was waiting for -- i had lost connection with time, i thought for a moment, smiled and left the station -- i knew the train i was waiting for would never arrive as it had already completed its run as i left, familiar gatling clicks indicated another speeding train i turned in time to see a face in the last cabin smiling, eyes reflecting mine it was ... someone familiar but heading in the opposite direction i crossed overgrown unused tracks as i left tho they too offered only two directions

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-2700.html