

Too much conjecture misses the point

by molly Tuesday, Dec 4 2012, 9:18am

international / prose / post

The approaching Galactic alignment, 21/12, will assist understanding

The video below came highly recommended, it is enjoyable, rational but limited; how I wish people would take the next step, it seems the entire alternative community is in chorus on this simple but limited point of fact -- that we are star dust.

But as most astrophysicists would inform you, cosmic dust is simply 'condensed' light.

There is no matter to speak of, we perceive 'matter' due to a limited scope of awareness, much the same way as we 'see' a limited range of colours and hues or hear a limited frequency of sounds.

We appreciate matter because we are in its range and it appears to us as something tangible when in fact we are only dealing with limitless light in the continuum we call existence.

In fact 'condensed light,' as previously stated does not exist. The notion something other than the pure 'white' light of creation exists is perverse.

Nevertheless, enjoy the vid and try not to forget that we are in fact infinite beings in an infinite universe.

We are all able to 'backtrack,' so to speak, and discover the origins of existence in ourselves -- we are not separate from all creation. Though unenlightened and primitive religion -- especially the Abrahamic trio -- would have you believe in the most absurd children's fairy tales and outright LIES!

It's all very well, isn't it? But do not be too harsh on matter or too abstract with existence -- we wouldn't be able to fuck, kill or destroy without gross matter -- 'enjoy' what you have. ;o)

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-274.html>