

America Last

by claire Sunday, Aug 13 2017, 12:36am

international / prose / post

Given that the USA is a dog-eat-dog, survival of the fittest, social Darwinist culture, it becomes exceedingly simple to predict its future -- mob rule. Recent clashes of opposing groups in Virginia indicate as much, you see, the difference today is that various groups of citizens are engaged in clashes whereas in the 60's citizens clashed with the State, a critical difference.

All powerful empires and nations fail/fall from within, there are no exceptions in the historical record, and if ever the scene was set for collapse, it certainly is in the USA, how so?

First the nation is now completely captured by non-representative elites that collude together to maintain their elite positions while imposing evermore restrictions and social constraints on the masses -- pan surveillance for instance, notwithstanding the ever diminishing wages/living standards of average Americans while elite coffers are bursting at the seams with ill-gotten (exploitation) cash.

Now, as the overwhelming majority suffer these elite created, socially engineered deprivations, the primary of which is engineered debt-slavery, and the consequent social hardships associated, the rich get richer as has ALWAYS been the case in the USA, yet we see very little reaction from the masses over this searing inequity and monumental injustice. You see, in social Darwinist cultures people at the bottom accept their fate as a 'natural' outcome/consequence of 'personal failure, inadequacy,' which is in effect only the internalised lies and ideological propaganda of a social Darwinist culture/ideology; now think about that situation, surely the overwhelming majority facing a tiny elite minority is more than an adequate force to deal with exploitation and the inequitable distribution of wealth -- an entire city could easily be paralysed if only cleaners and sewage workers went on an indefinite strike, and that outcome arises from only TWO vocational categories. One easily appreciates the consequences for a state if numerous categories of slave employment acted in a unified, organised fashion; indeed the non-representative elite could easily be replaced by the representative work-force -- problem solved, or is it?

Obviously not, the masses are pitched in battle (competition) against each other and so are far from united and cooperative, yet it should be clear to everyone that our species survived only by COOPERATION and mutual assistance, divided we are nothing, as is easily proven by reality, a tiny minority holds sway over hundreds of millions of people, absurd. But that is how a social Darwinist culture, which is anti-survival, functions.

For a brief period it seems to work, elites rise and others/subordinates accept their lot as failures; however, cooperation and social cohesion are in our DNA as evolution and human history clearly indicate. And so it becomes plain that we must return to our innate survival instincts and cooperate rather than fight each other, which is a source of amusement for elites, as they have created those divisive circumstances.

The farther a species strays from its survival mechanisms the surer it is to fail as a species and of course that applies to cultures/nations/states. Extolling separation/division by presenting the 'individual' as the epitome of freedom is a counter-survival strategy as history and today's reality indicates. Consider for a minute how free we are today as divided competing 'individuals,' the masses are in reality debt-indentured slaves working slavishly for elites which group COOPERATES to maintain their privileged positions. However, ideologies perverse or otherwise hold unconscious sway over minds and so we now have groups of 'individuals' clashing with each other though they share the same deprived circumstances, another laughing point for elites that consciously engineered such outcomes. But everything comes at a price and the price for an alienated, competing culture is fragmentation, ever increasing weakness, socially destructive anarchy and mob-rule, as will surely be the case for America.

The world could simply watch America implode if it chooses to; a social Darwinist culture has only one option that extends its life, that is to project its exploitative, oppressive rule to outsiders either by force or intimidation; for instance, engineered sanctions on other nations, are in essence illegal, as sanctions amount to nothing less than coercive blackmail, notwithstanding, the many instances of overt (illegal) military intervention, or brazen criminal force. And so while the USA is able to demonise other cultures/groups and present them as a national threat the elite created lies and propaganda of a 'common enemy' serves to extend its life but not indefinitely as the Darwinist individual would always compete and exploit others to the mutual destruction of both. While it appears impossible at this stage in America's devolution, the overwhelming majority may choose to unite and simply watch a culture or elite faction implode.

Today, as always, no single nation is able to fight the entire world, though the ideologically perverse USA would attempt such a folly as it has no other choice. Better that all subjugated nations withdraw all support, passive and/or active, and view American perversity as a failing spectacle and lesson in how not to formulate cultures and survive. Social Darwinist America will be the least of all nations in the not too distant future, it has sealed its own fate, as the WORLD would soon reject its external, violent projections on others.

<https://tinyurl.com/y8m4c7n3>

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-2816.html>