

Falling ...

by tracie Friday, Sep 15 2017, 10:30am international / poetry / post is only frightening to the ignorant

falling in love
falling asleep, are they causes for concern? no, they are desired, sometimes frantically pursued, which of course is not falling, pursuing requires effort falling implies letting go of everything yet i have failed myself my stupid will now obstructs the free flow of falling and the knowing that one is caught by a destination the route to which is unknown -- falling does not map or calculate a path it frees one to arrive without thought and action we know intuitively we are safe when we fall even physically, tho that may result in death but only of the body nothing exists that is able to extinguish the safety of a free fall a genuine Indian Saint, an extinct species today, once recommended falling into the ultimate reality/samadhi he got it right. the pristine everlasting does not admit those that carry baggage, if release is sought then carrying chains is self-defeating, fall into ur essential Self, an art almost lost today tho the remnants remain in dreams, falling in dreams tears at the emotions until we hit bottom and realise we survived tho the horror of the experience sticks like glue and so i thought i would induce a dream and fall, so after falling asleep i dreamt i was falling, when i awoke i found i had fallen into my lover's arms, my bothersome will now

left behind

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-2874.html>