

The Floundering President

by claire Sunday, Oct 15 2017, 10:32pm

international / prose / post

The Guardian recently reported that Trump has isolated himself from his political base in Washington, principally due to his infantile, impetuous and petulant nature, which among other severe personality flaws clearly defines him as unfit and incapable of performing the duties of President of the United States. That obvious fact aside, his minders, or assassins, as politics is a cut-throat business, which no novice should enter without years of experience or strong expert political support, Trump remains commander-in-chief and is entirely capable of triggering a war, in fact he is the Pentagon's puppet mascot. We should not downplay Trump's insane, mindless threats directed at North Korea, delivered at the United Nations, which location adds veracity to the insane threats. So beware.

It seems that it would have been too difficult for the American political establishment to overtly remove Trump and so the softer though efficient option was chosen, let the impetuous novice hang himself, and sure enough Trump has succeeded in now positioning himself for a huge fall. However, political novices are forced to take advice from others and Trump's idiotic threat to trash the Iran nuclear accord, which has astonished most of the sane civilised world, is clearly the result of Netanyahu influencing Trump, who is a soft touch for false admiration.

Indeed, the need of NPD sufferers for adoration blinds them to reality and so Netanyahu succeeded easily to undermine Iran, which Israel views as its most serious threat, notwithstanding Israel has always utilised Washington to fight its wars and arm it with nuclear weapons, which act contravened international conventions. Nevertheless, Israel remains a stolen nation and is therefore subject to all manner of existential threats and internal paranoia, hence the subversion by Israel of the Iran nuclear accord.

However, that serious imbecilic action aside, it is the fact that political novice Trump remains in the control of his generals that causes concern, as certain forces in Washington explicitly follow a world domination via military force, agenda/doctrine (PNAC). And so, does America and the world have the time to wait for Trump's political suicide? I think not.

Every major nuclear superpower is now planning a pre-emptive nuclear strike on its perceived enemies as there is no such thing as a defensive nuclear war. Be advised gutless Congress and the US Senate and remove Trump immediately; that act alone would defuse to a considerable extent the critical pressure build-up to a pre-emptive nuclear strike by any capable nation. Nuclear wars are offensive, not defensive, by nature. Allowing dangerous unqualified, easily swayed imbeciles to head nuclear superpowers is a recipe for disaster.