

Catalonia: If it's Good Enough for Kosovo it's Good Enough for Catalonia

by drew Saturday, Oct 21 2017, 11:31pm

international / prose / post

Indeed it is, with one huge condition/proviso, that is, does it suit America and its EU/NATO puppets?

You would have to laugh at the HYPOCRISY of the EU/Spain/America, why not allow a people that wish to be free and independent, their FREEDOM? Well, that is obvious.

America is not interested one way or the other in Catalanian independence, it has no geo-strategic value, HOWEVER, the precedent has been set in Kosovo where America allied itself to an internationally listed, but since de-listed (?) CRIMINAL terrorist organisation -- the Muslim KLA -- to assist it in amputating a province from SOVEREIGN Yugoslavia/Serbia; a completely ILLEGAL act, yet law-flouting (therefore criminal) America/NATO succeeded, at least for the present time, so why not independence for Catalonia, which is an ethnically diverse population that includes Basques; so why not allow Catalanian independence?

If the matter is taken to the international courts where various laws and conventions protect national boundaries and State sovereignty, then of course SERBIA would follow suit and regain Kosovo if the Madrid government succeeded and quoted the laws and conventions protecting STATES, which America/NATO brazenly FLOUTED in relation to Kosovo.

Clearly there is more to Catalanian independence than meets the casual eye. If Spain succeeds in quashing Catalonia's DEMOCRATIC bid for independence then watch out star-spangled and NATO puppet clowns. The law is a two-edged sword in this instance and threatens to cut far deeper than is immediately apparent. Of course traditional Serbian ally, Russia, would have a field day supporting Serbia in its bid to regain STOLEN Kosovo and then utilise, with Serbia's (a given) permission, US military base 'Bondsteel' for its own purposes to protect the Balkans from outside criminal interference again.

International law is not an American plaything, so step up to the mark all parties and watch either Spain or America/NATO lose. THAT SIMPLE!

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-2951.html>