

A Spoilt, Attention-Seeking Petulant Toddler in the White House

by brenda Thursday, Nov 30 2017, 2:07am

international / prose / post

Indeed, the closest approximation to Donald Trump in the real world is as the title indicates, and we all have experience of this type of spoilt infant that would aggravate, scream, irritate and do anything to get attention. Fortunately most of these badly raised, by sensitive new age guys (SNAGS) and politically correct, indulgent mothers, do grow into stable maturity after confronting the outside world which does not tolerate these behaviours. School is a great teacher as kids from an early age are exposed to other kids, most of which have been fairly well raised. Neither teachers or other kids succumb to toddler tantrums and attention seeking.

I remember distinctly when I attended pre-school we had one such BRAT, the teacher/carer simply told other children to completely IGNORE the brat and if the brat became violent to other kids, the teacher sent the brat outside to a fenced, protected sandy area from which he/she could see the other children happily interacting and enjoying school.

While this approach is probably considered politically incorrect today, it worked wonders as the brat, faced only with themselves soon realised that any extreme behaviour would get them nowhere and so eventually they settled down and re-joined the class; furthermore, they were very happy to do so, as isolation within view of others behaving appropriately and enjoying themselves is a great silent teacher by example.

Yet we have in the White House an emotionally retarded person as commander-in-chief who pursues this type of ABERRANT infant behaviour on a daily basis and unfortunately the American media panders to these clearly pathological, attention-seeking antics/behaviours and so it continues.

Trump, when he feels he is losing attention, flagrantly LIES big time, spews racial abuse/slurs, gross sexual innuendos, and threatens to nuke other nations, that'll get 'their attention' -- the attention his now pathological, narcissistic personality craves and must have.

Trump is nothing more than a spoilt toddler that reached adult age with an undeveloped infant brain, no doubt his family money insulated him and enabled him to survive and grow into an emotionally stunted but extremely deviant adult. But is it good for the American people/nation? Clearly not!

Trump knows as an infant knows, who butters his bread and so ingratiates himself to any such entity that provides for his survival, now notice how Trump today clearly serves the power elite and pursues any policy/agenda they design/dictate, while at the same time reneging on his former promises to the people. But the people have no power in the USA, or so they have been trained to believe, notwithstanding the fact that the most powerful force in any society is the people. So even for an emotional retard the choice for Trump was EASY, serve the power elite that make and break all presidents. There is no other reason Trump remains in office, his servitude to the deep state is complete and the elite derive much satisfaction watching how this petulant brat manages the media, masses and others, which he does, though no other nation would tolerate this flawed, ignorant, clown for an instant in any position of responsibility -- only in America!

It would therefore be futile to suggest that the mass and alternative media boycott Trump and all direct and indirect mention of Trump, which would indeed cure the problem; in fact it may even force the power elite to take action as an ignored president is clearly of no use to the power elite. The pretense of a real 'democratically elected' president must be maintained at all costs otherwise the entire world would know who really rules the USA.

So, journalists, what would you? The daily 'news' in ALL media is saturated with Trump stories, and that must stop simply because it's not real news, it's PANDERING!

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-3024.html>