Things

by jude Monday, Feb 12 2018, 6:09am international / poetry / post > the still whiteness deceives, its serenity harbours explosive force certain actions realise certain results a potential avalanche at critical mass needs very little to trigger the devastating fall what we know is where it ends in the valley/lowland after everything on the slopes has been impacted the picturesque village at the bottom of the mountain seems like an array of doll's houses a wise sage once informed me that thoughts were things as powerful, if not more so, than actions a rifle-carrying fool knowing nothing of the danger shoots at a wild sheep, the report rings through the valley and echoes, locals dread the result similar thoughts attract each other in the aether and become a cumulative force seeking expression they grow, fed constantly by men's minds another harsh crack is heard but not from a rifle the ice and snow near the top of the mountain is released, in an instant the entire accumulated snow and ice roars down the side of the mountain and buries the village snapping the houses like so many matchsticks it is not an accidental result, though the fool with the gun, unaware, triggered the devastation accumulated good and bad thoughts vie with each other until one becomes stronger and overwhelms the other how simple it is to think, speak and act for the good of all, which ensures the good of the thinker today however, there are too many 'armed' fools ready to kill others and themselves ...

'We don't like that kind of disposition, don't be so reckless, put down your 'guns.'

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-3180.html