

Treasure

by sadh Friday, Feb 16 2018, 7:56pm international / poetry / post i have hidden it well yet it remains close always the crossing of two rivers marks its beginning though it was born in cool roaring fire

two waters indicating its direction flow fast circling spinning wheels up to a silver lake which empties into a shoreless sea as it moves it creates sounds/music which octaves never depart from the initial harmony the symphony of ascent defies every known law of man, it is something precious beyond all the wealth of worlds, it is something other yet immediate and always accessible is it my love for you emerging from your chrysalis and expanding your coloured wings or the love it generates of its own accord?

i watch you form into a winged being of unimaginable beauty, delicate and soft yet indestructible recognising me instantly, you approach and embrace me wrapping your translucent wings around our bodies

it's good to be back in your arms i have waited patiently for so long that time died trying to keep itself light begins to roll forming huge waves of sound now synchronised with the swoon your wings tighten and seal our bodies tightly together as you continue your ascent now at blistering speed with me captive in your arms we reach the mountain lake and rise from its depths breaching as we hit the surface spinning so fast the waters of the lake are captured like a geyser in our ascent through and through we go and go capturing and swallowing everything that exists and ejecting it into otherness little percussions mark every penetrated dimension as we pass through and through until we flash into the boundless ocean where my treasure is hidden in plain sight

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-3191.html>