the rolling hills rise and fall only to rise and fall again bodies suspended in space form spheres the most economical form, yet these bodies move in elliptical orbits each tugging against the other creating a tight balance which defies the formation of perfect circles every sinew, nerve and cell in this body articulates your name, to whom should this created body bow? only to its creators and yet all bodies born must die, where is this Eternity?

it is formless beyond definition, nameless beyond all characterisation, mind/culture is not able to grasp anything other than itself and so it is something else, not of culture/mind, matter, gross energy or learned patterns of behaviour and thought something lost then found and when found it becomes known it was never lost who could add or take a scintilla from existence, all that fills space continuously is neither diminished or increased? tho it is constant flux moving between gross and fine then from fine to gross again tho each revolution is distinct nothing repeats itself as it did before or after, we add nothing to the treasure we inherited our choice is only to give it all away in order for it to be replenished, retention only stagnates and stultifies life your toil and thought is for naught, as everything necessary for life is freely supplied, the life in every seeding fruit and grain, the life in a man's and woman's seed together form bodies from the food of the earth to what end?

so renegade spirits could find a temporary home tho a price is extracted as each physical home becomes a prison walled by material desire, emotion, lust and fear -bodies are very aware of their vulnerability and needs and so spirits are temporarily trapped in matter; subject to matter they must learn that the light of spirit requires no body or vessel to shine those that give most receive most, those that retain receive nothing, as no space is available to refill the cup -- give freely as everything has been given freely to you who could add a jot to their stature, who is able to possess light? where would you house light?

contained light becomes darkness, your light is made brilliant by removing barriers not creating them i required wisdom when young and so read every scratching that great men made until i happened on a maple leaf freshly fallen, translucent in its dying, every vein, pore and serrated pattern contained more wisdom than everything recorded by men, the entire mystery of the universe is encoded in its manifestation, pine cones, sea shells and flowers indicate infinity, of what need do i have for any book?

continuity/existence is naked in its beauty, and light is brilliant in its nakedness what mystery do you speak of when all around sings its song and dances to its music openly?

life and existence are an open book containing not one confining finite word of men the hills roll, rising and falling like the waves of an open sea, above the waves a violet crested seabird rides the air-stream the waves create, barely flapping a wing it rides for miles above the rolling sea, effortlessly
