The Tops

the blue mountains along the east coast of Oz are aptly named as blue is their most prominent feature tho they are not mountains they are the remnants of a plateau eroded by wind and water over millions of years now presenting as mountains it seems more practical to name them according to the dreamtime of the originals, each feature, animal and contour intertwined with perceptions of harmonious survival, native law and the sacred, which has persisted here longer than any other human society on earth, tho white invaders continue to commit genocide on the few remaining, not with guns but with cultural annihilation yet the dreaming persists as i sit on an outcrop overlooking the great blue splendour, watching, sensitive to the sacred and the life in the forests breathing/moving in the valleys the gang-gang parrot of the Tops is not included in the sacred totems yet it has become a symbol of the ranges for me with its larrikin red-feathered crescent, smoky blue-grey plumage and acute intelligence almost matching that of the white humans of today that are removed from all things harmonious and natural -- they continue to desecrate the land unaware they are produced and sustained by/through its Purity i watch the setting light as it catches the red and yellow ochres of the cliffs exposed and scarred by logging -- no photo or painting could ever hope to catch the dancing lights and changing hues of the ranges that live in defiance of man's destructive ways the tribals are long gone from these ranges, the dislocated mixed bloods that remain boozing themselves into extinction in white towns, the price of forfeiting an ancient culture is death, black and white remain polar opposites it strikes me that Oz, the land, creates the myths and dreams as it magically impinges on human consciousness moving and contouring sensitive minds as it did to the originals over thousands of years and so the enduring blue of the mountains and every natural thing that inhabits them continue, too large to be wounded by blind, disconnected, and insensitive white men
