Diamonds and Pearls

by sadh Saturday, May 12 2018, 1:28am international / poetry / post > nothing perturbs the diamond mind of Zen storms confront it and resolve themselves into the clarity of a clear blue summer sky, nothing sticks, do ducks get wet in the rain?

the diamond mind remains unblemished regardless of all that confronts it though it takes unrelenting focus and steadfast meditative practice to achieve clarity and awareness understand the perfection, impervious to all pleasurable and painful assaults, it remains clear and aware, which imperturbability leads to awareness and supra-normal abilities inherent in all human beings, but only manifest once perfect clarity is achieved with clarity comes knowledge, understanding, and the ability to see things fresh, as they are, not as presented or coloured by experience, which distorts the diamond mind grants a special vision uncluttered by culturally learned biases which enslave the majority perhaps a Zen anecdote delivers meaning better:

two Zen monks were travelling from one monastery to another, a day's journey.

the two happened on a flooding stream which impeded the progress of a young, aristocratic, beautiful woman.

'could you please assist me crossing the stream, she asked?'

with that the older monk picked the woman up and carried her across the knee deep stream accompanied by his companion who seemed troubled by the occurrence.

the monk placed the lady on the ground and resumed his journey with his companion, whose face now indicated agitation.

the monks journeyed together for a short distance, the younger monk, still clearly troubled, could not restrain himself and blurted, 'we are not supposed to look at women yet you took her in your arms and carried her.'

'yes,' replied the older monk, 'but i put her down on the other side of the stream, you are still carrying her!'

and therein lies the secret of the unpolluted, perpetually fresh, untroubled, diamond mind

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-3312.html