Walking with Buddha

by june Friday, Jan 25 2013, 10:19pm international / poetry / post

if you walk with Buddha on your right then be assured Mara, the great tempter, is immediately to your left this world is defined by opposites -but for the notion of 'good,' 'evil' could not exist.

the more we toil to achieve a particular objective the closer its opposite approaches; great achievements are necessarily accompanied by greats falls, polarities are inextricably bound everything is defined by its opposite;

locked in mutual embrace, polarised forces vie for supremacy, eternal conflict appears to be the one consistent characteristic of this plane or is it a signpost to salvation?

if we strive for a high ideal, we risk the usurper
stealing our prize,
it is the dilemma of the ages prompting an ancient poet/scribe to vent his frustration and despair,
'there is nothing new
under the sun,' he wrote
when in reality the opposite is true nothing remains the same for an instant;

conservatives toil in vain to preserve and chisel their values in stone only to have them disintegrate before their eyes whenever great calamity or 'evil' dominates be assured its total defeat is inevitable, as it creates all the forces necessary for its own destruction; it's as certain as the cycles of night and day.

it seems we face a dilemma in this world, the fruitless and futile struggle of polar opposites or the choice of freedom, emancipation.

ancient and modern scribes have shown the way, it has been written; 'If you see the Buddha on the road, kill him!'

Indeed, all teachers are frauds whether by intent, circumstance, folly or tradition -- no-one can give you what you already possess unless they lie and deceive. gurus are slaves to their disciples as their disciples are slaves to their gurus/masters, however, the obvious fact remains, emancipation is a singular endeavour and a highly personal attainment.

following or subscribing to any teaching, person or existing inscription -- doctrine, dogma or discipline -- is the height of perversity, Liberation is not found in the binding chains of prescription.

Why should we kill the Buddha or crucify a Christ?

we do so to shatter the bonds of blind obedience (slavery) and free ourselves from the inculcated dreams/myths of culture -- [remember] culture is the mother of all binary oppositions and polarities and culture, as is evident today, is inherently perverse/sick, i need not qualify the obvious.

consider the strange narrative of the Gospel of Luke in which the victorious end is presented at the beginning. Prior to the apparent defeat, victory is asserted at the outset. the protagonist figure is tempted by his opposite, thesis and anti-thesis struggle and the protagonist overcomes, not by vanquishing his opponent, but by disengagement; the opponent is acknowledged but not engaged ('get thee behind me').

the futility of the endless struggle of polar opposites is clearly avoided in favour of another way.

the Buddha also avoids polar extremes and advocates the middle ground.

both narrative figures acknowledge our world of corruption, misery and perversity but demonstrate that the optimum approach to divisive extremes is to understand, withdraw your active or passive support, but never subscribe or take 'sides.'

now, you would be a fool to believe in or subscribe to anything i say, wouldn't you?

you have been free since your inception, any bonds are purely illusory and self-imposed, all constraints are of your own taking (subscribing) not making;

you (not your body) have been made whole, perfect in every way complete.

Are we aware of any leaders today that lie and deceive?

would you continue to actively or passively support cultural perversity, divisive hatred and destruction or would you withdraw your subscription/support and allow harmony to prevail?

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-366.html