

You can say that again!

by ivy Thursday, Mar 14 2013, 10:09pm

international / prose / post

A recent post to an alternative American news site ran with the title: "37 Percent of People in US Are Completely Lost"

The story, authored by Mark Morford, contained the following gross grammatical error/typo: "... it's safe to say about 37 percent of Americans are just are not very bright. Or rather, quite shockingly dumb..."

The following paragraph began thus: "Did you frown at that last paragraph [above]? Was it a terribly elitist and unkind thing to say?"

Answer: No, it proves the point, all Americans are morons even the condescending few that imagine they are a not -- hilarious!

However, the best example to cite regarding American imbecility is the government account of the 9/11 attack -- my 12yo doesn't have any trouble identifying oversights, omissions, searing CONTRADICTIONS and other (building 7) scientific proof that the government story is a contrived fiction -- u fuckin' lobotomised American imbeciles!

But careful you do not state the obvious, doodles, otherwise we'll indefinitely detain you without trial or charge or add you to our secret, mafia style kill list.

America, land of cringing cowards and morons!

Launch immediately!

<http://www.informationclearinghouse.info/article34301.htm>

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-449.html>