

Uncompromising

by quill Saturday, Apr 27 2013, 9:12am international / poetry / post i sought u with single-minded dedication

second best was unacceptable, with fervent religious zeal and the fixed focus of a diamond cutter
i persisted

i knew u were there
my bones and soul
confirmed it
ur Being tugged at mine thru the night
and day
my heart responded only to ur ineffable splendour

i realised young the worthlessness of cultural values and the vacuity of
its directions,
the high priests of perversity offered only the prize of blow flies, maggot-ridden shit,
so delectable to that species

i sought the pure essence, the attar of existence
the source of all creation the unpolluted
crystal water of
mount meru,
nothing else would do

i had no idea this pursuit would attract the scorn and hatred of the herd, the wrath of pedagogs
the violence and torture of regulators
and the vengeance of magistrates assailed and opposed at every turn setback on numerous occasions i persisted regardless tho with some trepidation, as it became clear

that what i sought
with unbridled passion and desire was feared and detested
by the princes and rulers
of this world --
so fearful were they
of my objective
they resorted to torture, incarceration and
every form of intimidation in an effort to dissuade me from my goal

un-deterred i persisted;
ur radiance and magnetic attraction drew me into ur orbit

in spiralling descent
i gravitated to ur presence until i was no more;
every impurity burnt
in the fire of our mutual embrace
until i became something other than what i appeared to be sufficiently camouflaged i returned transformed

to the world of men and began to dissolve
and subvert the foundations of their world

it was automatic and effortless as my transformed Self was somehow invested with the ability to eliminate illusions and cure delusions

the fears of princes, kings, high priests and magistrates validated

