Notwithstanding that special investigator for the UN, Carla Del Ponte, determined that US and Israeli backed Syrian rebel forces were using chemical weapons, puppet president Obama accused Assad's government forces of using those weapons as an excuse to arm his rebel forces which are currently being routed by the Syrian military! Déjà vu Iraq LIES, but will a much wiser WORLD tolerate such brazen fabricated 'WMD' deceit AGAIN? Your call Russia and yellow dog China!

Both Russia and China have a history of abandoning their allies in their time of dire need. The Balkan fragmentation would not have occurred had traditional ally Russia intervened and ally China, well the world is aware that the Chinese are slaves and cowards of the first order.

The US (Israel) now plays the most tattered (WMD) card in its criminal deck; it does this in the knowledge that historically gutless non-interventionist policies of both Asian superpowers will be consistent.

The world watches and waits to witness whether or not claims that Chinese and Russian leaders are in the pockets of global plutocrats are verified -- WE SHALL SEE! As there will be no doubt whatsoever on this occasion.

In the event that both Asian superpowers do not intervene and legally support their ally, Syria, it will become plain that the global population has one enemy that rules by proxy throughout the entire world. It would be a simple matter from there -- universal uprisings on a global scale; a unified global resistance against evil mass murdering MONEYED ELITES that use politicians as expendable puppets -- take note of the word 'EXPENDABLE,' treasonous politicians serving minority interests at this time. Today's wars are borderless as indeed are the forces that fight them.

Report from RT follows:

US to Give Military Support to Syrian Rebels as 'Red Line' Crossed

After 'concluding' that the Syrian government has used chemical weapons against the country's insurgency, thus crossing a 'red line,' the Obama administration has decided to arm anti-Assad rebels for the first time, officials say.

An internal memorandum circulating within the Obama administration has assessed that chemical weapons, most likely the nerve gas sarin, were used multiple times in battle against the Syrian rebels.

The "intelligence community assesses that the Assad regime has used chemical weapons on a small scale against the opposition multiple times in the last year," according to that memo, as cited by The New York Times.

President Obama has authorized to release of at least some US arms for Syria's rebels as part of new military and political aid measures, according to a source who spoke with Reuters.

White House officials speculated over evidence that nerve gas had been used as of April, but that evidence is now being called "definitive" - with Congressional sources describing the conclusion as crossing the "red line" for US military intervention or backing as previously defined by the president.

"The president has made a decision about providing more support to the opposition, that will involve providing direct support to the (Supreme Military Council), that includes military support," Deputy National Security Advisor Ben Rhodes told reporters on a conference call on Thursday.

"This is going to be different in both scope and scale in terms of what we are providing to the SMC than what we have provided before," he adds.

According to officials who spoke with the Wall Street Journal on Thursday, the US military is currently considering a proposal for arming factions of the Syrian insurgency - as well as establishing a limited no-fly zone over the country to be enforced from nearby Jordanian territory.

That no-fly zone could stretch for up to 25 miles into Syrian territory, and would be set up in a bid to train and equip rebel forces and protect refugees, officials said.

A no-fly zone would not require the destruction of Syrian anti-aircraft batteries, according to the accounts cited in American media. The White House could alternatively authorize the arming and training of the Syrian opposition in Jordan without a no-fly zone.

Congress was being notified of the conclusions over chemical weapons use in the country on Thursday in classified documents. Findings were corroborated by evidence sent to the US by France, which along with the UK claimed that Assad's forces had used chemical weapons.

"There is a growing body persuasive evidence showing that the regime used - and continues to use - chemical weapons, including sarin," a spokesman for Britain's Foreign Office said Thursday.

"The room for doubt continues to diminish. Assad must grant the UN investigation unrestricted access to investigate on the ground in Syria and establish the full facts," he added.

In a conference call to reporters on Thursday, the White House said that the intelligence community estimates that as many as 150 people, or about 0.16 per cent (0.0016) of the 93,000 reported deaths in the Syrian conflict, could have been a result of chemical weapons used by pro-Assad forces.

The White House said during the same call that the US "will make decisions on our own timeline" regarding the next steps on Syria. President Obama will consult with G8 partners, including Russia, about Syria next week.

Republican senators John McCain and Lindsay Graham called on the US to provide "lethal assistance, especially ammunition & heavy weapons" to Syria's rebels on Thursday.

"The President must rally an international coalition to take military actions to degrade Assad's ability to use airpower and ballistic missiles and to move and resupply his forces around the battlefield by air," said a joint statement by the pair.

As a UN probe was underway into allegations of chemical weapons use in May, lead investigator Carla Del Ponte said the findings showed that rebels were behind at least one chemical weapons attack. "This was used on the part of the opposition, the rebels, not by the government authorities," Del Ponte told Swiss TV.
