

Where do they get off?

by hank Saturday, Jun 15 2013, 11:10am

international / prose / post

Unrepresentative Leadership

First they LIE through their teeth to get elected, then they renege on all their promises and serve minority moneyed interests instead of representing the majority which they were commissioned to represent. Next -- under instruction from nefarious minority elites -- they implement indefinite detention laws without charge or trial or any hope of challenging accusers; they legalise surveillance, torture and then compile secret lists (without independent oversight) to murder citizens, all the while saying trust us, we are keeping you safe! Today it is CLEAR that the people need to be protected from deceptive criminal governments, are you reading this Obama, you traitorous piece of dog shit? Of course I refer to our less than honest politicians, the lot of 'em.

Do not make excuses for these reprehensible, LYING, treasonous criminals or accept their actions as normal because quite simply their actions are criminal and in most cases treasonous, as politicians are elected to represent the MAJORITY NOT serve an unrepresentative wealthy elite.

Demand that politicians serve the national interest and represent the democratic majority or undertake steps to have them removed from office. There is absolutely no need to wait years for the next election. Any politician whose approval rating falls below 40% over an extended period, no longer has the support of the people, therefore their elected right to stay in office is clearly FORFEITED. That's how things work in a real democracy.

If politicians ignore the legitimate demands of citizens, simply have them removed from office or arrange to have them removed, one way or the other. The law favours the majority in all democracies, especially when approval ratings of leaders remain below 40%. If the people do not ensure that their best interests are being served, then who will?

Jungle Drum Prose/Poetry. <http://jungledrum.lingama.net/news/story-630.html>