

It doesn't matter what you think, because you don't count!

by jill Friday, Nov 1 2013, 3:29am

international / prose / post

Have you ever wondered why the world accepts, extra-judicial assassinations, or indefinite detention on suspicion, torture, perpetual war, mass murder and numerous war and other crimes against humanity TODAY, when only a few decades past lying presidents faced impeachment?

The answer is obvious, previous generations would not tolerate gross injustices and criminal behaviour from government; dissenting forces hit the streets and made their presence felt every time anyone in authority put a foot wrong; in other words previous generations mattered because they were a united social and moral force to be reckoned with, they 'counted' because they earned the right to be recognised through social struggle.

Now compare today's tragic x and y ('KY') generations of alienated hedonists, self-involved narcissists and frightened passive cowards, to the labour movement fighters of the 30's, 50's and to the political and ideological idealist ACTIVISTS of the 60's, and you will learn that nothing is magically gifted, everything comes hard and must be taken via direct confrontation and popular revolts against criminal elitists, yes, even national revolutions!

I do not wish to highlight the general tragic character of modern generations but they present as a very poor comparison to the past indeed; notwithstanding notable exceptions like Manning and to a lesser extent, Snowden.

Criminal elites have never had it so good, real resistance to their heinous activities is minimal and what does exist is not direct opposition or physically confrontational, it is largely passive and of a discursive, non-threatening nature.

Times have changed you say, but one thing will never change, nothing good comes without a struggle or FIGHT!

Indeed, times have changed, the struggle today is largely an underground phenomenon but the fight must be waged 'above ground' so everyone is able to see the RESULTS, though no-one should be able to identify the players as individuals; all effective players today are ONE, a merged force; no-one takes credit for any action but forever engages the criminal elites and their political puppets.

As for the rest, you do not count or amount to anything; you are slaves, doped up on corporate soma and are truly fit for slaughter!