There is nothing unusual regarding America's bullying tactics except for the fact that the U.S.A -- like all cowardly bullies -- usually applies its CLEARLY terrorist, stand-over tactics on much weaker small nations, like Yugoslavia, Iraq, Afghanistan, Libya, Syria, Sudan, Somalia etc; however, it has never attempted, for obvious reasons, to intimidate a nuclear superpower. So whoever initiated this provocative fly-over of Chinese air space under puppet Obama's watch, requires a good carpeting if not a complete career trashing. What reaction did the U.S. hope to achieve, China cowering in fear and running?

The Chinese are well aware they have everything required to wage a successful military confrontation with another superpower except (valuable) EXPERIENCE in international warfare! A situation in which America leads; the Chinese, though clearly reluctant to engage in any military actions, would seize for practical/pragmatic purposes, the extremely valuable opportunity to gain experience in a modern military confrontation with another superpower -- Russia has a wealth of experience and its assistance would be invaluable if assistance was forthcoming; a situation that would clearly see Russia and China as victors.

Whether the U.S. continues to provoke China or it withdraws is of no concern as China would be 'victorious' regardless.

It is clear to the entire international community that the USA lacks objective clarity and the depth of thought to be able to weigh all considerations, hence the latest supremely stupid and disastrous blunder.

Conflict for China is actually in its interests but for America spells doom -- imagine the minimal population of North America under a limited but real nuclear attack -- enough said.

However, as biased analysts we do hope that the USA fails to see reason and continues in its provocations, as the sooner it all comes to a head the better for everyone -- how very very simple it would be to eliminate a miniscule 300 million Americans from this planet.

Either way you look at it, you dumb doodle dreamboats, you're fucked!
