> this adopted land has sustained me throughout my life, its ancient enduring strength i feel in my bones i share the awe, deep respect and connection with the originals who were always here singing, dancing moving in rhythm with this magical place this land sings and whispers the entire history of the earth and humankind it is not the land of my birth though those ties have never been severed -- something i discovered after rustic America bombed Belgrade -the city of my birth two nations only i vow to protect with my life and blood of my blood; the blueness of sky and astonishing pure whiteness of nimbic clouds over the place of my birth coexists with the mystical presence of the red centre and its ineffable desert beauty -nothing is able to touch me here this secret land has taught me to be and not to be in order to survive and fight against the star-spangled pestilence that infects and destabilises a planet -- innocence defiled, the blood of unrecognised saints flows like rivers around the globe and yet we endure, and fight, moving like blacks in the forests of the night we are the wind and breeze, the shadows before the dawn my original tongue displaced by Sydney english, my Balkan frame and Mongol eyes work in concert to dumbfound, taunt and destroy the beast which has no answer for the opponent it now faces
